WHOLE NO. 1673:

We are pained to be obliged to give the acts of a distressing occurrence on the south side yesterday morning, which is shocking to a painful degree. A man named Joseph Litz, only twenty years of age, a mere lad, was employed in Mc-Knight's rolling mills in the capacity of workman in some one of the branches of their nail manufactory. Between eight and pine calculate workerlags morning he On the Ramparts at Paris. LINE OF SENTINELS DEMAND THE PASS WORD AT EVERY STEP-A VISIT TO A FRENCH FORT-THE SAILOR DEFEND-

Last night and early this morning I had an opportunity to inspect the bars of the cage in which I am confined. I happened say before a superior officer that I was to say before a superior officer that I was very desirous to ees what was going on on the ramparts and in the forts at night, but that I had as yet been coted in my end eavors to do so, when he told me that he would take me to both, provided in any account that I might give of them I would not mention localities, which might get him into trouble, or in general anything which might afford aid and comfort to the Litz was drawn forward. People involuntarily grasp anything when they feel themselves falling, and poor Litz unwarily caught at the revolving wheel; his arm was thrown forward, and he slipped through the opening in the wheel.

Quick as lightning he was twisted into the space of about two inches between the flywheel and the heavy upright post which held it in its place. It is incredible that a man's head and neck, shoulders and arms should have been crushed into Of course I accepted this; offer, enemy. Of course I accepted this offer, and at 11 o'clock p. m., we started on horseback. We soon struck the Rue des Ramparts, and dismounted. Along the top of the ramparts there was a line of tentinels. They were so numerous in some places that they almost touched each other. Every once in a while the cry, "Sentinelles prenz garde a vous," went along. Behind them grands gardes and other patrols were continually passing, and we could hardly and arms should have been crushed into such a narrow space. At the outside it could not have been wider than two and a half inches. The jamming of the upper part of his body into the narrow space at once stopped the shears. The poor fellow presented a pitiable spectacle. His head and shoulders and arms were taken out in a thousand pieces. We arrived on the spot just as the undertaker had finished his terrible work of gathering up what had once been a thuman being, instinct with gradus gardes and other parrots were con-tinually passing, and we could hardly move a step without being obliged to give the password, with a bayonet in close proximity to our chests. The National Guards were sleeping, in some places in tents, in others in huts, and I found many more in the neighboring boarding houses. Here and there was a cauteen, where coffee and other such refreshments once been a human being, instinct with were sold, and in some places casemates were already built. In the bastions there were campis of artillerymen, Mobiles and once been a numan being, instinct with life, into the coffin, prepared to receive it. His head and upper portion of the body were taken out of the head of the shears in a thousand pieces, and placed in a handsome coffin, on which was inscribed his name Nationals. All was very quiet, and I was agreeably surprised to find with what order and method everything was conducted.

At about four o'clock this morning we passed through one of the gates. Outside and age, and taken from the place.

The works were suspended on the occurthere were patrols coming and going, and I could see numerous regiments on each side of the road, some in tents, others the casualty, and there was a universal feeling of sorrow and of sympathy with the only member of deceased's family of sleeping in the open air, or trying to do so, for the nights are very chilly. We whom we could hear, residing in the neighborhood. rere stopped almost every two minutes, and my friend had to explain who and what he was. At last we reached a fort. The only relative near him is a brother, who resides on the south side. We could Here we had a long parley before we were admitted. When we got in, the day was not find any one who knew of his having parents living. He was a single man, and bore a good character among his combreaking. We were taken into the room of the commandant, with whom my friend had some business to transact. He was a sailor, and from his cool and calm depanions. He has been engaged to be married to a young lady on the south side, and she is inconsolable at his shock-ing death. menner, I am convinced that he will give a good account of himself if he is attacked. In the fort there were Mobiles and soldirs, and by the guns stood the sailors. It talked to several of them as they leant against their guns, or walked up and down as though they were keeping watch on deck. None of them had left the fort for the last three weeks, and they seemed to have no particular desire to go "on shore," as they call Paris. Their fire, they said, had, they believed, done considerable damage to the works which the Prussians had tried to creet, within their range. The The New York Loyal League are to commander now came out with some of his officers, and we tried to search with descopes the distant woods which were supposed to conceal the enemy. Herald Nev. 11.

The Hamburg-American Packet Company have added a new and first-class stemaship to their fleet in the Thuringia, which arrived at this port on Wednesday next. This ship, built especially for the passenger trude, in which she is now engaged, is one of the finest which ever entered the port of New York. She was built for the company by Mesers. Keaird and Co., of Greenock, Scotland, who laid her keel in the spring of 1869, and she was fluished in July, 1870. Her carrying capacity is 3,195 tons, English measurement, or about 3,500 tons American register, and her extreme length is 350 feet, with 40 feet breadth for team. Her depth of hold is 34 feet. Her hull is divided in seven water-tight compart the Failure of the Armistice. London, Nov. 13.

Bismarck has issued a circular to the representatives of North Germany in foreign States, giving his version of the late negotions for an armistice. The appointment of such a man as Thiers by the French to conduct the negotions—a man of such wide experience had excited hopes of propositions that might be successful. King William was even more eager for peace than Thiers. Bismarck proposed a truce for four weeks, the position of the respective armies meanwhile to be fixed, in order that elections might be held throughout France. The only affect on the French side of this truce could have been the stoppage of a waste of ammuni-
